Professional Profile

Dr. Dore is a pharmacoepidemiologist who specializes in studying the post-marketing safety and effectiveness of medical products as they are used in customary clinical practice. He has over 15 years of experience with regulated post-approval safety studies (PASS) conducted with secondary data sources (e.g., healthcare claims), and he has developed expertise in novel data linkages and supplementary data collection to address biases in these studies.

Additionally, Dr. Dore specializes in the development and research applications of large electronic health records (EHR) systems, which typically include a myriad of data types from various health systems. This work has included evaluating and improving the quality of complex EHR data, conducting applied research that involves the use of free-text clinical notes and methods to address missing data, and the design of pragmatic randomized trials. Dr. Dore has been on the faculty at the Brown University School of Public Health since 2008.

Academic Credentials & Professional Honors

Ph.D., Epidemiology, Brown University, 2008

Pharm.D., Pharmacology, University of Rhode Island, 2004

Academic Appointments

Adjunct Professor of Health Services, Policy & Practice, Brown University School of Public Health, 2022 - Present

Adjunct Assistant Professor of Health Services, Policy & Practice, Brown University School of Public Health, 2008 - 2022

Prior Experience

Epidemiologist, Vice President, Chief Research Officer, Optum/UnitedHealth Group, 2007 - 2019

Assistant Professor of Health Services, Policy & Practice (tenure track) and Assistant Professor of Epidemiology, Brown University of School of Public Health, 2011 - 2014

Professional Affiliations
